Garden Bird Feeding Advice

The more foods you use, the greater the variety of birds you will attract. Raisins, apples and mild grated cheese will all attract different species.

A garden with berry bushes, wild flowers and seed heads left on the plants will provide natural food throughout the year.

Multiple feeders will give extra feeding space for more birds and allow timid species a better chance of a meal.

Avoid positioning feeders and birdtables too close to places where predators such as cats can lurk.

Feed throughout the year to allow adult birds the chance to maintain condition while raising families. Avoid bread (inevitable salt content), whole peanuts and fat when chicks are in the nest. It is important to keep feeding into June, and beyond, if conditions dictate but be sure to stock up in May!

Remember to provide fresh water regularly.

Enjoy your garden birds. Keep binoculars and a notebook by the window so you can make a note of any unusual species.

Big Garden Birdwatch

Take part in the RSPB Big Garden Birdwatch during the last weekend of January every year.

Garden Bird Survey

We would encourage all with an environmental interest to add to scientific knowledge by joining the BTO's Garden Birdwatch scheme. For details contact the British Trust for Ornithology, The Nunnery, Thetford, IP24 2BR. Tel: 01842 750050. Website: www.bto.org.

Bird Feeding Hygiene

Keep feeders and bird tables cleaned regularly. A very weak disinfectant solution (1:10) can be used every four to six weeks to clean feeders and birdtables.

Always wear gloves when handling bird feeders or wash your hands thoroughly afterwards.

Vary the area on which feed is scattered and don't allow piles of food to build up, this could attract rats and mice.

Avoid the same food remaining in feeders for more than one week. Moving feeders and birdtables every six months or so can help prevent build up of droppings and disease.

Contact the RSPB for free leaflets on all aspects of gardening for wildlife.

Trichomonosis.

To help prevent the spread of disease among birds keep your bird tables and surrounding areas clean. Clean and wash your bird table and hanging feeders regularly. Water containers should be rinsed out frequently. Personal hygiene is also important. Don't bring your feeders into the house to clean them - do it outside.
